TWO JOURNEYS.

We bade a sad farewell to her
Who started out one day,
A sad faced little sufferer,
But smiling glad and gay.

She left our rugged sea lands here,
Where baneful breezes blow,
And sought new health, new life, new cheer,
Where summer's flowers grow.

A smile around her pale face played,
A light beamed in her eyes;
She seemed a heaven born angel, strayed
A while from out the skies.

We bade her God speed and farewell,
With trembling lip, and eye
O'erflowed with tears. Ah, who could tell
'Twas not our last good-by?

And now our darling has come home,
With us a while to bide,
And then once more prepare to roam
To shores afar, untold.

And now we speak in tones subdued,
And unheeded tears fast flow;
And forms in prayerful attitude
Are bent in sorrow low.

Once more her burdens she will take,
And go where angels lead;
A long, long journey she will make—
And now, once more, God speed.

ONE OCTOBER MORNING.

Flowers stood on the window sills; all sorts of pretty knick-knacks and feminine appointments brightened up young Mrs. Clifton's morning room, while over everything the soft autumn sunshine fell with enhancing touch.

The golden rays lingered longest in the chestnut braids which crowned the bride's shapely head, but they found no reflection in the face beneath; its beauty was clouded by a look of sorrowful perplexity. Elizabeth Clifton had been married just a month, and the first shadow had come over her happiness.

"I suppose it was some tiresome business that upset Henry so," she sighed, "for it was just after he had read his letters; it must have been the one he thrust into his pocket that had the bad news. But how completely his manner to me changed! I don't understand it. When I asked him if anything was the matter he actually mumbled something I couldn't make out, and then the clock struck, and we heard the whistle of the train; that provoking train it always comes at the wrong time. But the worst of all was his not kissing me good-by! To be sure, he had done so once when he first got up from the breakfast table, thinking he wouldn't wait for the mail, and I know he was in a hurry when that whistle sounded, for it just gives him time to reach the station; but it wouldn't have taken a minute to say good-by again, and instead he rushed off without a word!"

By this time the young wife, in spite of herself, was crying quietly. But she was a brave girl, and did not give way any more than she could help. After a little she decided to go out and take a walk. She would probably have time before her mother-in-law had risen, and the fresh air might do her good. No, she would not sit and mope any longer; so, jumping up suddenly, Elizabeth carefully removed all traces of weeping, and put on her garden hat. She was about to step toward the door when a knock sounded thereat.

Looking hastily in the mirror to see whether any tear stains were visible on her face she opened the door as little as possible, that she might not be seen. Her mother-in-law's maid stood in the hall.

"Mrs. Clifton is ready to see you, ma'am, whenever you wish to come," the girl said respectfully.

"Very well, Jane; I will be there in a few moments." And giving another peep into the glass to be sure that her eyes were not red Elizabeth went to make her regular morning visit to the invalid.

The young couple had spent the first part of their honeymoon in a pleasant trip to Niagara, returning thence to pay a visit to the elder Mrs. Clifton in her pretty country home in one of the picturesque valleys of Pennsylvania.

The bride had never seen her husband's mother, and had rather dreaded the ordeal of making her acquaintance. She found her very charming, but was haunted by a secret fear that her admiration was not returned; she fancied that she was undergoing a critical scrutiny from the fond parent whose only child she had married. This morning Elizabeth particularly shrank from the interview, for she feared that her face was a telltale one. However, the visit must be gone through with; so, summoning all her courage, she boldly knocked at the door of her mother-in-law's sitting room, and was at once admitted.

"Good morning, my dear," said the elder Mrs. Clifton in a low, sweet voice, and the young lady knelt to receive her usual kiss.

The invalid pressed her pale thin lips against Elizabeth's soft rosy ones, and then, laying her hand gently on her daughter-in-law's shoulder, looked mildly but searchingly into the upturned face.

"How do you feel this morning, mother?" asked Elizabeth gently.

"Very well, thank you, for me. But how are you, my child? Didn't you sleep well last night? Your eyes look dull and heavy."

"I have a slight headache," answered the young wife, hoping thus to account for her clouded face. "How did you think Henry seemed when he stopped in to say good morning and good-by to you before he came into breakfast?" she continued, trying to speak carelessly.

"He looked very well—splendid," was the reply. "Didn't you think so, too?"

"Oh, yes, certainly," said Elizabeth hastily.

"It is too bad for you that he had to rush off to attend to that bothersome business of mine, leaving you alone, with nobody but a stupid old woman to keep you company; but never mind it; it won't take him more than a day or two, and the matter was very important—it involved considerable money. Besides," with a little laugh, "the honeymoon ended yesterday; you must come down out of Paradise."

"Don't trouble about that, I am not in the least lonely," answered Elizabeth, "and, as you say, the honeymoon is over."

But her heart sank within her at the ominous words. Was this what Henry's manner that morning meant?

"My dear," said the elderly lady, closing the book which had been lying open on her lap and putting it on a wicker chair that stood close by, "I was only joking; I hope and pray that Henry's and your honeymoon will never be over. As long as you love each other you have a glimpse of Paradise."

There was silence for a few moments. Elizabeth seated herself in a rocking chair, took off her hat, which she had forgotten in her preoccupation, and began talking about indifferent matters.

At last, in obedience to her mother-in-law's suggestion and thankful to be released, young Mrs. Clifton started out for a walk. It would be better than staying in the house, trying to sew or read, and there was a shady wood near by where she could be undisturbed. It opened on the high road, but a fence kept out all intruders. As Elizabeth neared her destination she noticed that a tall tree outside the wood was bent and nearly uprooted, while the branches were almost denuded of the leaves which only two days before had glowed in all the red and gold glory of autumn. Then she remembered that it had stormed the previous day—one of those violent storms which sometimes come early and rob the forests of their foliage. With a shiver Elizabeth wondered if a chill had come over every one—was the winter indeed come?

Left alone in her quiet room the elder Mrs. Clifton leaned back in her armchair looking grave.

"Poor child! I wonder if they have had their first quarrel? Well, I suppose it must come some time. They will be all right by evening. I am sorry Henry was obliged to be gone all day; I wish I could help them," and she ended her soliloquy with a sorrowful shake of the head.

In the meantime Elizabeth did not get a chance to enter the wood; for, as she stopped by the bent tree, she glanced up the road and saw in the distance a party of ladies and gentlemen whom she fancied she recognized. They evidently knew her, for they waved their handkerchiefs, shouting and gesticulating frantically. As they came nearer she saw that they were the young people belonging to several families in the neighborhood, all of whom had called on her and at whose houses she had visited.

Elizabeth stood her ground.

"There is no use in retreating into the wood," she told herself; "they would only follow and hunt me up. I must submit."

She did so very unwillingly, however, for she did not feel in the least like seeing strangers; she consoled herself by thinking that they probably had some object in view and would soon go on their way. She was disappointed in this, for no sooner had greetings been exchanged than the foremost of the party—Miss Earle, a young lady to whom Elizabeth had taken quite a fancy and who was a favorite of Mrs. Clifton's—cried out:

"How lucky! We were just coming to the house after you. We had planned a picnic for today, but yesterday's storm has made the woods too damp, so we have decided to take a straw ride instead. You must come—it is great fun—and your husband, too; isn't he at home?"

"Mr. Clifton was called away today on business," answered Elizabeth, "and I'm afraid I can't leave mother for any length of time."

But the party would not accept this excuse. Mrs. Clifton the elder was used to being alone—they knew that, and she—young Mrs. Clifton—must be lonely, with her husband away.

Protestations were useless; so finally, seeing there was no way of escape, Elizabeth yielded gracefully, only stipulating that she must tell her mother-in-law where she was going. Two or three of the party wanted to go in her stead, but this she positively refused to allow. There was a farm a short distance up the road, where their conveyance awaited them, and Mrs. Clifton agreed to meet them there. Some of the people would have insisted on accompanying her; but, being possessed of quick intuition, and divining that the young bride was in no mood for company, Miss Earle dragged the whole party toward the meeting place, leaving Elizabeth to hurry home alone.

"If they have had a tiff she had better forget her misery in company, after she has had time to recover herself," was Miss Earle's wise reflection.

Young Mrs. Clifton informed her mother-in-law of the invitation, which she was of course urged to accept, said good-by, and went to her own room to make some changes in her toilet. She lingered over the process as long as possible, putting off the moment of joining the merry makers until she felt she must go. Then she started out at a very laggard pace.

Hardly had Elizabeth entered her room when her husband knocked at his mother's door.

"Why, Henry! you have got back very early," cried the invalid in surprise, when her son appeared in answer to her "Come in."

"Yes, Ormsby was away; I couldn't do anything. I shall have to go to-morrow," Mr. Clifton answered, as he stooped to kiss the face upturned to his.

"If I hadn't known you expected me home this evening I would have remained all night."

This total ignoring of his wife startled Mrs. Clifton, and one look into her son's stern face strengthened her fears.

"Poor babies! they must not really quarrel," she thought, and then she spoke.

"Henry, my dear boy," she said gently, "if you and Elizabeth have had a disagreement find her at once and make it up. Don't let it go on, I beseech you."

"Mother, it is much worse than a disagreement. Has she said anything to you?" was the reply.

"Nothing, my son, and I do not wish to know; it is entirely between you two. I only beg you to do as I say."

There was silence for a moment or two, and then Henry asked gloomily:

"Where is Elizabeth?"

Mrs. Clifton explained her daughter-in-law's whereabouts, adding:

"If you go at once, Henry, you may be able to overtake her before she reaches the rest of the party." And she accompanied the words with a beseeching look.

An instant's hesitation, and with an abrupt good-by the young man left the room, while his mother leaned back with an air of relief.

"It will surely all come right now," she told herself.

Young Mrs. Clifton was just leaving the wood to set out on the high road toward the farm when she heard her name called in a voice she recognized at once as her husband's, though the tone was new to her ears. She waited until he came up to where she stood. Then, in a very ceremonious manner, he accounted for his unexpected appearance. In a tone equally cold Elizabeth informed him where she was going, pointing toward the farm house as she spoke.

Young Mr. Clifton had removed his hat and held it in his hand when addressing his wife; but a sudden cold gust of wind made him put it on again. After she had finished speaking he said gravely:

"Elizabeth, I have something to say to you. Will you give up this pleasure party, if I make your excuses to them, and listen to me for a few minutes?"

The idea of giving up this pleasure party struck young Mrs. Clifton with a sense of bitter absurdity. For a moment a spirit of defiance possessed her, and the answer "No" trembled on her lip. In that short space of time her life's happiness, perhaps, hung in the balance.

"I will wait here," Elizabeth said at last, and, lifting his hat very ceremoniously, her husband, with a formal "Thank you," walked rapidly up the road.

The minutes seemed like hours until he returned. Elizabeth stood motionless just where he had left her. He came quite close and looked keenly into her face.

"I have a letter here I would like you to read," he said, in horribly judicial tones; "but first let me explain how it came into my possession. If you will look at the address you will notice that the word 'Mrs.' is written very much like 'Mr.'—the 's' is hardly noticeable. Jane gave it to me this morning with my mail. I hastily broke it open without even glancing at the outside, not being a woman, and—perhaps you can explain the rest."

Elizabeth received the extended envelope mechanically, looked at the direction and then took out the inclosure—two sheets of closely written note paper—looked at that and then up at her husband.

"I have not read it all," he said, in a very quiet tone.

"Perhaps if you had you would have seen it was not for me," his wife answered, just as quietly.

Elizabeth felt only a terrible anger—all other feelings seemed in abeyance. She looked at the letter again, while her husband watched her in dull amazement. What did this mean? Was it guilt or innocence?

Suddenly it flashed over her what her husband must have felt when he saw the words of endearment on the page—"My own darling"—that must have stared at him the instant he unfolded the sheet.

"Henry," she began, lifting her clear eyes to his, "if you had shown me this before you went away?"

"I hadn't time," he hastily interrupted. But she went on without heeding him: "It would have saved us both a very unhappy morning. I have been foolish, I knew that, and so I did not dare to tell you. Henry, that letter was intended for Cousin Kate Ashton. See, the signature is 'Edward St. Clair.' Don't you remember he was in love with her, but the family forbade an engagement, would not even permit a correspondence? In a moment of weakness I said he might address his letters to me, and then I would re-enclose them to Kate. I have been sufficiently punished for my folly."

"Elizabeth, forgive me!" was all her husband could say, and for answer she smiled up at him through her tears.

Presently Henry told her how near he came to not showing her the letter.

"It was my dear mother who induced me to do it," he said, tenderly, and Elizabeth whispered: "Let us go to thank her; she need not know how foolish I have been."

"Dear, we will lock the secret of our folly in our own bosoms," Henry answered; "and perhaps we have learned a lesson we shall never forget, this one October morning."—Peterson's Magazine.

A New Explosive Carbonite.

The new explosive "carbonite" is giving satisfaction to coal miners. At a meeting of the South Wales Institute of Engineers Mr. W. Stewart stated that within his experience a ton of the material had been used without a sign of flame or sparking. It is a stable compound and can be stored without deterioration for any length of time. It is rendered comparatively safe by the fact that a detonator is required to explode it. If struck with a hammer or stone no danger need be apprehended. Carbonite is lighter than dynamite, is of a brownish color, and contains 25 per cent. of nitro-glycerine. Certain sulphureted hydro-carbons are added to moderate the susceptibility of the nitro-glycerine. —New York Telegram.

A Historic Chair.

During his visit to the Ottumwa, Ia., coal palace President Harrison sat in a chair in which the four first presidents of the United States and also President John Quincy Adams had sat during their terms of office. The relic is the property of a citizen of Kookuk and is over 200 years old. —St. Joseph News.

GREAT GRANITE GORGE.

A Vivid Picture of the Scenery Along the Banks of the Colorado.

The great Granite Gorge is about forty miles in length. That portion from its head to the Bright Angel creek, some fifteen miles, is narrow, dark and gloomy. It stands at the upper gateway of the great canyon as if by its very frown to keep back the intruder, and guard from vulgar eyes and sordid greed the grandeur, the beauty and hidden treasure of the lower canyon. At the Bright Angel creek everything changes—the granite slopes are flatter, they are of a softer black granite, cut into sharp pinnacles and crags, and seem more as if formed of very coarsely stratified slate.

The canyon grows more and more picturesque and beautiful the further we proceed. The granite has lost its awful and threatening look, and slopes back in beautiful hillsides of variegated black, gray and green.

At the side canyons, and from the bends of the river, the upper portions of the whole gorge are brought into view, showing the great marble and sandstone cliffs, benched back far away from the river, while mountains jut in close between the side canyons and washes nearly a mile and a quarter in height. As we look down the river, or up a low side canyon, with the placid water between its polished walls of black and gray and green for a foreground, there rise above the dark sandstone, tier upon tier, bench upon bench, terrace upon terrace, stepping back farther and farther, and higher and higher, and in immensity of height and proportion seeming to tower almost over our heads. First above the dark sandstone come the flattened slopes of the lime and mineralized matter, in horizontal layers of yellow, brown, white, red and green.

Then rise sheer walls of stained marble 1,000 feet or more, the lower portions of red growing brighter as it nears the top. Above this smaller benches of marble, at the top of each a little mesa covered with green bunch grass and bushes, and above these a dozen or more terraces of scarlet and flame colored sandstone, stained on their outer points with black, and the little benches between them relieved by the bright green of the grease wood and bunch grass, the whole crowned with perhaps a couple of thousand feet of the lighter gray, yellow and white sandstone ledges, capped by pinnacles and spires, turrets and domes, in every imaginable shape, size and proportion. —R. B. Stanton in Scribner's.

Names.

There is a certain amount of satisfaction perhaps in giving a whimsical name to a pet animal, but such names often require so much explanation that they become a burden. A Boston lady lately related this little story of her cat:

"We had a kitten who had a marvelous talent for escaping from all kinds of perils. He was shut up in an oven by a headless servant and left there overnight, but although it seemed that he must be baked to a crisp, he came out in the morning none the worse for the fiery ordeal."

"He was run over by a railroad train, but crouched close to the ground and escaped injury. He received a charge of bird shot one day while he was himself hunting birds in the woods, but we picked out as many of the shot as we could, and he began at once to recover and soon was all right again."

"Finally he was put into a bag with a stone and thrown into a river, but he managed to find a small hole in one corner of the bag, and enlarged it so that he was able to get out. Then he swam ashore and came home."

"In view of these marvelous escapes we decided to keep the cat, and gave him the name of Plutarch, because he had so many lives."

The name was a happy one, and yet, as the story of Plutarch's adventures had to be told each time his name was mentioned to a new acquaintance, his owners wished at last that they had named him plain Tom or Dick.

Similar explanations were necessary on the part of the man who named his two canaries, Wheeler and Wilson, "because neither was a Singer."—Youth's Companion.

Great Range in Price of China.

In English ware the Doullon ranges in price from $10 for a set of 135 pieces to $125 for one dozen plates. There is a difference in the quality of the ware as well as in the decoration. The cheaper sets, from $10 to $20 each, are porcelain; the finer and more expensive are china. The porcelain is decorated by stamping or painting the colors on, and little or no gold is used. All the fine English and French chinas show a great deal of dull or burnished gold in the decoration. It wears better than bright gold and has a softer effect. All the gold used for this purpose is fourteen or sixteen carat, and its cost is a heavy item in the price of the ware.

Minton china, also English, is very beautiful. Sixty-five dollars will buy one dozen handsome plates. Royal Worcester is so expensive that only the favored few can possess it.

To those who cannot pay fancy prices, perhaps the Doullon offers greater possibilities, as much of it is what the dealers call open stock and the entire set need not be purchased. Dessert, and luncheon plates, decorated in blue and gold and of different designs, are $11 a dozen. —New York Telegram.

Baking by Electricity.

Bakers are now using the electric motor as a bread mixer, and are thus enabled to do in four or five minutes an amount of work that would otherwise require hours of hand labor. A writer in a medical paper says he had frequently obtained much relief from facial neuralgia by applying an incandescent light to the part affected. He suggested that the lamp could also be used in politicking advantageously. It could be laid over a flaxseed or other form of politice, and constant heat could be thus secured.

It seems that in her estimation he does not exactly fill the bill, as his actual appearance does not tally with the photograph sent. He may have followed the advice given by the old photographer to the young man who was kicking about the looks of his picture. "Young man, if you want a good looking picture, you have got to get somebody else to sit for it."

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhoea, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children Teething is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle.

A Valuable Gift.

Senator John P. Jones has presented Chas. W. Friend, of the Nevada Weather Service with a splendid electro-chronograph for use in the Carson observatory. It may be considered as an appendage to the astronomical clock for its chief use is to subdivide the seconds of the clock, and thus measure micrometrically the smallest portion of time. It is a delicate and costly instrument and is just what Mr. Friend has long desired.

KILLED IN THE CHOLLAR

Harry Chappel is Killed by an Explosion.

Harry Chappel, Tim Leary and Jack Stephens were working in a raise on the 850 level of the Chollar mine at 2 o'clock yesterday morning, and had just set off a blast. They went up to ascertain the effect of the blast, when an explosion occurred.

Chappel was instantly killed, and Stephens was badly burned about the head, but it is thought he will live unless erysipelas sets in.

Leary was slightly hurt about the face, and seemed to be suffering principally from the shock.

Theories as to the catastrophe are numerous, but the most acceptable seems to be that it was another gas explosion, similar to that by which Assistant Superintendent Pendergast and Foreman Owens were so badly burned a short time ago, and narrowly escaped death.

Neither Stephens nor Leary were able to give an intelligible account of how the accident occurred. Stephens was in great pain and moaning loudly, while Leary's mind was wandering.

Royce & Lansing.

The Daily Times, Deadwood, Dakota, October 17, 1889. "Royce & Lansing's Musical Comedy Company is entitled to a much more extended notice than our space will admit this morning. Numerically it is not a strong organization, but whatever may be lacking in numbers is more than balanced by versatility and artistic ability. Thus estimated, it is by all odds the largest, as it certainly is for every consideration, the best company ever to visit the Hills. The play has merely a pretext of a plot to enable individual members to display their powers of mimicry and accomplishments as vocalists and musicians. Of music there is no end, and yet no plethora, for whether we speak of vocal qualities or instrumentation, it must be entirely commendatory. Of course Mr. Royce is the satellite around which revolve the lesser lights, and yet, as we recall the brilliant glances, or still listen to the melody of voice and instrument of others of the party, we feel it wrong to discriminate. Lizzie Royce is a bewitching little actress with voice as sweet and pure as a bird's. Nellie Harris is no less accomplished, and both display complete mastery of many different instruments. Mr. Charles Horvitz is excellent in dialect and comedy. A very large audience greeted the company and was sent home more than delighted."

This company will play at the McKissick Opera House Wednesday evening, Dec. 17th. Box sheet at Hodgkinson's.

Miss Adelaide Moore.

Liverpool Sporting Gossip: Miss Adelaide Moore, who is this week playing at the Shakespeare, has a reason d'être. She is a favorite pupil of old John Ryder, who educated Adelaide Neilson. She is not a fashionable actress. She is not on the stage for the purpose of displaying her millinery. She is a devoted disciple of romantic drama, and she has attained the most important piece of wisdom in connection with the art of the stage, viz.—that there were great men before Agamemnon.

You don't know what I mean? Very well. Miss Moore is in earnest—so intensely in earnest that when she saw Modjeska play Rosalind she went home and cried, and gave up the stage "for ever!"

That is the sort of "real stuff" she is made of. Given a woman of high intellectual capacity, splendid training, and deep feeling, and a passion for the stage, and you must have an actress. All the rest is experience, and Miss Moore, without being a fashionable beauty, has worked hard and labored all over England as well as America.

Miss Moore will appear as Juliet in Romeo and Juliet at McKissick's Opera House Monday evening, December 15th.

The White House.

Attention is called to the ad. of Abraham Bros. in this issue. This firm carries one of the largest stocks of gent's furnishing goods of any house in the State; a first-class article, quick sales and small profits has been the secret of the large and increasing business done by this house.

A Hard Time.

Uncle Jake McKissick who started from Reno on horseback last Friday for Spanish Spring Valley got lost in the hills and was twenty-five hours making twelve miles. When discovered he was unable to dismount or speak.

The National Silver Convention.

WASHINGTON, December 10.—A meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Silver Convention was held here at noon. After an informal discussion, General A. J. Warner of Ohio and Francis G. Newlands of Nevada were appointed a committee to draft resolutions and an address to be presented to Congress, urging the free and unlimited coinage of silver. The committee was instructed to report tomorrow.

There were present to-day General A. J. Warner of Ohio, Chairman; Lee Crandall of the District of Columbia, Secretary; Francis G. Newlands, Nevada; Thomas H. Nelson, Indiana; George B. Williams, District of Columbia; Edward Cartis, California; W. Porter, Virginia.

NEW TO-DAY.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, and often leads to self-destruction. Distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irritable bowels, are some of the more common symptoms. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful, persistent attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet surely and efficiently. It tones the stomach and other organs, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, and by thus overcoming the local symptoms removes the sympathetic effects of the disease, banishes the headache, and refreshes the tired mind. "I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness, or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble, I think, was aggravated by my business, which is that of a painter, and from being more or less shut up in a room with fresh paint. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla—took three bottles. It did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." George A. Page, Watertown, Mass.

AMERICAN-AUSTRALIAN TOUR

OF THE BEAUTIFUL AND ACCOMPLISHED

MISS ADELAIDE

MOORE

"THE QUEEN OF JULIETS,"

From the GLOBE THEATRE, London,

Accompanied by the Eminent

MR. JOSEPH WHELOCK

AND

A Company of Acknowledged Celebrity,

Under the Personal Direction of MR. WM. BREWSTER MOORE.

Mr. Bronson Howard, the greatest American dramatist of the day, says, "Miss Moore's voice has an indescribable charm."

The family relations of Miss Adelaide Moore are of a higher social standing than any other actress on the English or American stage, and yet she never mentions this fact in any of her numerous interviews.

Miss Adelaide Moore, although but twenty-five years of age, has played "Juliet" oftener, and is more closely identified with that character, than any other actress living. Her recent performances of that character for fifty consecutive nights at the Globe Theatre, London, is the longest run of that play with one exception on record.

When Miss Moore visited Verona, she studied every nook and corner of the great Capulet mansion. The balcony, by the way, projects from the third story of the palace. Romeo must have spoken very loud to have been heard by the fair Juliet.

One of the charming features of Miss Adelaide Moore's impersonation of "Juliet" is her sweet and gentle lisp, coupled with a slight English accent. Although a trifle puzzling to the ear in the first instance to grasp each and every word spoken one quickly grows accustomed to it. It adds to her voice a certain melodious softness that is intoxicatingly sweet to listen to, and in great harmony with the character of the lovely young daughter of the Capulets. That charm alone is worth a fortune. This, in addition to her graceful figure and lovely face, make her the most attractive and fascinating "Juliet" of the present day.

250 Beautiful Lots For Sale!

A RARE CHANCE FOR AN INVESTMENT AND A HOME

THE MOST LOVELY PORTION OF RENO.

Facing the Truckee—The Aristocratic Avenue—Riverside Driveway—Splendid Sewerage—Healthy Location and Safe From Fire.

The proprietor is now ready to receive proposals for lots in Powning's Addition. The map gives a good idea of the tract, which is situated between the Central Pacific Railroad and the Truckee River, and commences on the west at a point three blocks distant from Virginia Street, making it the most central and convenient of any portion of the rapidly growing town of Reno. Unlike any other part of the town this Addition faces the beautiful Truckee River and Riverside Avenue is certain to become the fashionable driveway of the country. The streets are 80 feet wide, while Riverside and Keystone Avenues are intended to be 100 feet in width. All alleys are 20 feet wide. The soil is a rich gravelly loam, and susceptible of the highest state of cultivation. Being situated as it is it is more safe from fire than any other section. The regular lots are 50x140 feet. The sewerage is perfect.

Before Buying Elsewhere Parties will do Well to Look at These Lots.

RENO
Has no equal in Nevada or California for salubrity of climate, wealth of soil, diversity of products and stability. Situated in the very heart of the celebrated Truckee Meadows the future of Reno is assured. Reno is the City of Homes. There is not a house to rent in Reno. New buildings are occupied as fast as erected. Reno has advantages which no other town can equal. The climate is mild and genial in Winter, and even and healthful in Summer. There are no excessively heated or severely cold terms, and while the days may be warm in Summer the nights are deliciously cool; in Winter sleigh-riding is the exception and not the rule.

Facilities for irrigating surpass any in the State and there is no failure of crops. Reno has Churches of all denominations, Bishop Whitaker's School for Girls, Mt. St. Mary's Academy, the State University, and splendid Public Schools.

The Reno Water Co. furnishes ample pure, cold water for all purposes. The Reno Electric Light Co.'s electric light system, already well established, is being augmented. The Reno Gas Co. supplies gas for all purposes. The streets of Reno are lighted by electricity.
